A BALLAD.

The Plaintiff was a homely Maid Of forty years, or more. trolley car, it ran her down, And she, of course, was sore.

The lawyer was a cunning chat Who liked contingent fees. He naturally advised the Maid To nurse her injurees.

The damages the Plaintiff claimed Were modest as could be: She asked for fifty thousand pounds ed for thre

The experts were disint'rested, So six they swore that she Would die within a month or two, Six swore the contraree.

The jurors, honest men and true, They thought and thought and thought And then "For Plaintiff fifty thousand pounds" the verdict brought.

The jurors, tender-hearted men, Before they sought their bed, Each one, he nobly went and asked The plaintiff him to wed.

Alas! Alack! Alack-a-day! 'Twas ever thus in life! They found the Plaintiff-Maid no mor was the lawyer's wife!

 MRS. PELGROVE'S HAT. 22222 By Herbert Jamieson.

MATTHEW PELGROVE strolled along the esplanade at Hastings, chuckling to himself. From a moral standpoint he had done a most reprehensible thing, but the circumstances were certainly mitigating. May not much be forgiven to a man whose wife has a shrewish tongue, and ideas of expenditure that by no means square with the possibilities of a limited in-

Three days previously, in the privacy of their home at Hornsey, Matthew had remarked to his wife:

"My dear, I find I shall have to go to Bradford on Friday." Mrs. Pelgrove lowered the coffee-pot and glanced sharply across the table. "Oh! Rather unexpected, isn't it: On business?'

"Certainly! Must see some wool people there before the next London sales. Most important clients." "I understand. Shall I come, too?"

Matthew endangered the life of his cup by bringing it precipitately to the "Impossible, Mary! Bradford's no a place for pleasure. Besides, I shall be fully engaged all the time."

we hadn't lit up. She had on a won-derful hat, though." Pelgrove started. That was what had passed between them. And this Saturday afternoon, when his wife believed him to be in the north transacting business, Pelgrove, the arch-deceiver, was bathing in beautiful autumnal sunshine on the Hastings promenade.

He wore a blithe and jaunty air How sweet it was to capture, even for a week-end, the lost delights of bachelorhood! Did he not bless the comic paper that had first suggested to him this brilliant notion of duplicity, and resolve to subscribe to it for the future? The very day was in fitting accord with his spirit of hilarity.

At home Mrs. Pelgrove insisted on her husband dressing in harmony with the ideas of their genteel suburb, but here he had thrown (metaphorically) conventional attire to the winds-in deed, it consisted of little but a white flannel suit, a red and orange boating blazer, and a sun hat worn at a rakish tilt. As Matthew stepped along, observing the varied life of Hastings, he persuaded himself that he had not a care in the world. He could even smile at his wife's desperate ambition to cut a social figure, and her bitter discontent that he was not making money fast enough for the full attainment of her purpose. Money-bah!-the word had an ugly sound. Nothing should be allowed to poison to-day his draught of pleasure.

Now, Matthew Pelgrove was not given to much exercise, and he presently became aware that, despite the lightness of his raiment, his lower limbs were beginning to ache. He would seek one of those inviting shelters where, shielded from the sun's rays, he might watch the people and indulge to the full his present sense of contentment.

Proceeding a little farther he espied a vacant place. That glass partition dividing the seats on either side, would pleasantly shelter him from all draughts, and this corner seat looked most luxurious. The authorities really

But at that moment Matthew got a terrible shock. Sharply defined against calculated to bear the faintest inspec the glass on the other side of the shelter was a hat-a hat reposing on woman's head of golden hair. Matthew turned and literally ran from the spot. No one could mistake that hat-it was his wife's; he would pick it out amongst a thousand others. How vividly he remembered the sickening feeling with which three weeks ago he had regarded it, perched for the first time on her proudly raised head! Surely nothing so blatant, nothing so vulgar, had ever sprung to existence before in the millinery world. Through all the dark ages had feminine taste stooped to such an appalling confection of color? And the price -well, his bank balance suffered from it yet. So Mary had discovered his scheme and followed him to Hastings. But how in the name of wonder-ah, he had it! He had stupidly mentioned his real destination to the manager of his office. Evidently suspicious of something, his wife had gone there and secured the information that had led her to appear in this quarter. Out of breath with his unusual expenditure of energy, Pelgrove dropped his run to a walk and glanced furtively back. Thank goodness, that hat with the flaming, artificial flower-garden in it, visible for fully 100 yards with the naked eye, was not in sight! Mary had not seen him, then. He waiked on hurriedly to the small hotel where he was stopping.

Arrived there, Pelgrove sought the smoking-room and put to the test the nerve-soothing properties of a good cigar. What an escape! He hated & scene in public, and that his wife evidently sought. Here at least he would be safe, for no one knew where he was stopping. As long as he kept well hid and the next moment would see him his privacy would not be invaded, un-venture forth-but, no. If he stepped outside malevolent chance would certainly send him straight into the arms of his wife. He could not even sit at the window and be fanned by the breeze, lest she should pass below and catch a glimpse of him. The scene between them must come, but better-far better-that it should be reserved for

to-morrow evening, when their next-door neighbors at Hornsey (the Pelgroves occupied a semi-detached resi-

Towards nightfall Matthew became exceedingly restless. As an additional cause of grievance not a speck of cloud had showed itself in the sky, and everybody abroad looked more than usually happy. Over a whisky and soda-the despairing effort of an ab-

stemious man to revive his spirits-

Matthew groaned. His impromptu

holiday was not doing him the least bit of good. Better bickering at Hornsey than imprisonment in Hastings, with that dreadful shadow of the morrow

"I don't care; I'm going out," he said to himself, when the sun had set and

Pulling his hat well over his head and turning up his coat-collar, Matthew ventured outside. But despite the serenity of the night he did not enjoy would he meet his wife? He peered into the dark corners of shelters before he passed them: a dozen times

assumed the appearance of hers.

and the crowd on the esplanade grew

the hotel. This week-end at the sea-

As he passed through the hall the

"Oh!" replied Matthew, with ill-as-

"A lady and gentleman. Said they sumed unconcern. "Who were they?"

had seen your name in the visitors'

"Could you-er-describe them?"

"I only spoke to the lady, sir. The

"You can't remember at all how she

"It was too dark to see much, and

"I couldn't help noticing that; it was so startling. What my young man

some private inquiry agent whose serv-

turn to-night?" Matthew stammered.

Where shall I find you if they do?"

early in the morning, please?"

sank into unconsciousness.

.

bad headache. Have my bill ready

Twenty minutes later Matthew was snugly between the sheets. Yet, even there, was a man safe from his wife?

He listened nervously to every noise

on the stairs, fancying her step in the tread of every chambermaid, and it was fully a couple of hours before he

How Matthew Pelgrove transacted

his business next day he does not perfectly remember. Even in the days of his apprenticeship he never glanced so many times at the clock. But with

with the longing that some invisible

agency would push on the slowly-movirksome bondage of the office-stool

now that time might stand still, and that dreaded outbreak with his wife

fade into unreality. All his self-possession fled as he thought of the even-

If only he could frame some plausible excuse for his appearance at Hastings! Matthew, however, was not an imaginative man, and, rub his wits

as he might, he could find no reason

tion. It would be too transparently thin to suggest that another man of the name of Matthew Pelgrove had been stopping at that hotel. Hastings was not a business center, and it was quite inconceivable that he should have arranged to meet a client there. No:

the wisest plan seemed to be to brave it cut. He must explain that, feeling a bit run down, he had changed his mind

and, instead of going to Bradford, had proceeded to the sea-which statement,

A little after the usual time Matthew left the office for home. More from force of habit than anything else he bought an evening paper, but he found himself unable to make sense of a line

of it. His eyes wandered to his fellow-travelers in the railway carriage.

Did any of them anticipate domestic storms? Had any of them wandered in similar fashion from the path of rectitude and purchased a few hours

of enjoyment at the price he was pay-

The train drew up at Hornsey and

Matthew found himself one of a crowd filtering out of the station. If only at that moment he might be lost to sight

for evermore! When a married man did disappear in that way, was not his

He reached his garden-gate and gianced furtively at the house Mery

was invisible. He screwed up courage and mounted the steps. The house maid opened the door to him.

"Is your mistress in?"

wife usually the cause?

of course, had the essence of truth.

ing hands and bring release from the how different a motive! Then it was gentleman kept behind. He looked side was an entire fiasco.

list. They left no cards."

rather seedy beside her."

was dressed?"

to her ledger.

ices she had enlisted.

spoke to him.

you were out, sir."

walk. One thought intrudedchances of recognition were slighter.

hanging over his head!

the

dence) should alone be edified.

Hastings.

violently ejected into the street. less, indeed (perish the thought!), his He passed into the dining-room and wife sought in turn every hotel in was fishing under the sofa for his slippers when his wife entered. That evening Pelgrove made himself screwed up courage to look her in the fairly content with illustrated papers. face. Its expression confirmed his Next morning the sun rose in a cloudworst fears. less aky and everything pointed to a day of perfect weather. He longed to be down directly.'

"Your're home," she laconically remarked.

"Upstairs in her room, sir. She'!!

He placed hat and papers on the hat

stand. Never had he entered his house with such a peculiar feeling before. It was as though he had no right there,

"Yes. Things all gone well, Mary?" "Not at all! Are you ready for din-

"When I've found my other slipper." "You're late," continued Mrs. Pel-"Dinner's been kept back a grove. quarter of an hour, and you know how cross it makes cook. I have something serious to say to you after it." Personally, Matthew would have preferred having the matter out before the meal; it would act like a nightmare on his digestion. But he sat obediently up to the table and feigned interest in the viands, maintaining for appearance sake when the servant was present a flow of small talk, to which his wife shortly replied.

The meal ended and, folding up her serviette, Mrs. Pelgrove planted her elbows on the table. Her husband recognized the omen and trembled. "Had a successful little trip, Matthew? "Yes, very-thank you!" "You don't seem up to the mark tonight." "A triffing headache. Traveling, you know, does shake one up a bit. That reminds me. I've left my portmanteau at the office."

She made no comment, Matthew played with a salt-spoon. He could not possibly meet her gaze.

"I've been dreadfully put out, Matthew. I discovered on Saturday-oh, it's too awful to speak about." The blow was coming, and Pelgrove turned hot all over. Mary was clearly in the dim light other women's hats holding herself in. In a moment the storm would break in all its violence, When people streamed out of church and a poor man who had done wrong and knew it would go down before the thicker Matthew decided to return to "I was sitting at this window quietly sewing on Saturday morning, when an open fly drove by. Mr. and Mrs. young woman in charge of the office Needham Smith were in it, and the coachman had a pile of luggage beside "Some people called for you when him. But what do you think Mrs. Smith had on her head?" "I'm sure I don't know." replied

Matthew, puzzled, yet relieved. "Something absurd, I suppose. A yachting cap?

"No, Matthew; worse than that! Just think of the horror of it! A hat the precise image of my new one, Wasn't it a shock for me?"

Pelgrove saw daylight struggling through. "Really!" he exclaimed, excitedly.

'Where were they going?' "I didn't know at the time, but the grocer's man told me afterwards. They were off to spend a week at Hastings. Why, Matthew, what is the would call a kind of conservatory with matter with you?" the glass left out. I thought it would "Nothing-nothing. I was just thinkbardly go through the door unless she ing what a burning shame about that stepped back sideways, but some womhat. Mrs. Needham Smith has copied en know how to carry that style of it, I suppose. Now I remember, she thing," and the young lady sniffed by had hair much the same color as way of slight contempt, and returned yours, and thought perhaps it might suit her." Pelgrove had not moved. The blow "It doesn't, Matthew. She looks abhad fallen; his wife was hot on the solutely hideous in it. Oh, it's a scanscent. But who could her companion dal! I've not stirred from the house be? Seedily dressed, eh? Probably since; I was so upset. I shall never speak to that woman again. You are nct laughing?"

"Did they say-er-they would re-'Rather not! I'm just as put out as you, Mary. When I've bought you a "No, sir. Said nothing about that. nice thing, it's too bad to find it imitated. What a pity for you women "I'm going to bed. I have-er-a there isn't a law of copyright in hats!"

He felt like a school-boy again. So it was Mrs. Needham Smith who had given him the fright at Hastings, and she and her husband had been his visitors at the hotel. Now, fortunately, relations between their wives, never cordial ones, would entirely cease.

'I'm so glad you did well by going to Bradford, Mat. The fact is-well, must get another hat now."

"Of course! You shall have one immediately. Go to a good Regent street shop! Mrs. Smith can't very well copy what you get there."

"Oh, Matthew, how good of you! We mustn't let the Needham' Smiths cut us out. Could you afford to take me by-and-by down to Hastings for a little?"

She looked at him a trifle doubtfully. but his response was ready and eager. "We'll go, Mary, in about a week's time, directly the Needham Smith's get home. Why, it must be seven or eight years since we went to Hastings-together!"-London Tit Bits.

ROMANCE IN SMYRNA.

Beautiful Young Woman Slyly Traps a Wealthy Suitor in a Scheme

Recently an elderly oil merchant, who has for many years lived in Smyrna, fell in love with a beautiful young girl of the same city and asked her to marry him. She refused at first, but finally said that she would become his wife if before the ceremony was performed he would present her with the handsome house which he owned in the center of the city. He promised to do so, and straightway the necessary deed was drawn up, signed and handed to the covetous damsel, the understanding being that the marriage was to take place on the following morning, relates the New York Herald. That night the young lady slept in the newly-acquired house, and at the hour appointed for the ceremony the elderly suitor presented himself at the door in his new wedding garments. Instead, however, of receiving him as a sweetheart should, the young lady no ooner set eyes on him than she rushed to the door and gave him, with the aid of a stalwart youth, with whom she appeared to be on very friendly terms, a drubbing, which was so severe that he was hardly able to crawl away from the spot. After he had disappeared the faith less sweetheart and her companion barricaded themselves in the house and, though the disappointed oil merchant formally demanded that his property be returned to him, no attention was paid to him.

WORSE THAN PUGILISM.

Football, as Played in This Country. Claims More Victims Than the Prize-Ring.

Which is the more destructive to life and limb-football or pugilism? Statistics gathered by the New York World show 124 deaths from prize fighting since Tom Falkner was knocked out in England in 1758, the list ending with five in this country during 1903. During 1902 the prize ring had seven victims; in 1901 the number was eight; and it was ten in 1900. For some of these deaths men have gone to prison, stantiate the tale, so I am not worrying but the great majority of the men who gave the death blow were not even arrested. The figures show conclusively that the "sport" of the prize ring is brutal, and deserves repression. It is happily, not a popular sport in this country, thanks to unfriendly laws, sayt | mill that my father owned. It was one the Baltimore Sun, and does not at- of the old-fashioned kind of mills, the tract the unfavorable attention that is kind that you used to see when knocking given to football. The latter sport around in the woods. Bears had been seems, however, even more objection- troubling us very much by getting into able, if account be taken of the number and character of the victims. The World notes that the football season is barely six weeks in length, and the any headway toward exterminating number of players is fully 20 per cent. | them. greater than of the puginsts. "These pugilist.

Facts collected by Prof. E. E. Dexter, played football, and of this number 654 were seriously injured and 114 were out of ten engages cannot conduce the student body as a whole. The tenth student's field practice does not affect the muscles, heart and lungs of the other nine. The football game is. in fact, for nine-tenths of the boys only a spectacle, and for the rest largely demoralization. This is, unfortunately, too much the character of all college sports. Athletic exercise in the gymnasium is one thing, games are usually in character and effect something very different. They do not always injure seriously the participants, and this is the most that can be said for them.

MILLIONAIRE'S SYMPATHY.

Was Expressed for an Old Friend in a Manner Surprising and Substantial,

"A man whom I knew well, one who had once been a very prosperous business man in St. Louis, but who had met reverses, walked into the office of one of our western m....onaires and asked for the loan of five dollars," said ex-Congressman Charles F. Joy. of Missouri, recently, relates the Washington Post.

"The man seeking the favor had been close friend of the millionaire before he had become immensely rich. The unfortunate one went to the other in fear and trembling, dreading to be turned down, for he knew that the in a few seconds and commenced to renews of his taking to drink had reached new his meal. the ears of his old-time friend.

"He was greeted very cordially, however, and plucked up heart to ask for and it was but a few minutes before it the money. Immediately the millionaire's demeanor changed. 'No,' said he, was unconscious of his approaching

'I can't let you have five dollars.' "'I hardly expected you would,' replied the supplicant, 'but thought that out of the ordinary was doing the saw maybe for our former friendship you struck him amidships, and, as it was a might do me that little favor. However, it does not matter. When a mn's luck deserts him he can get no assistance from any quarter,' and with you ever saw. an air of absolute dejection he turned to leave the office.

" 'No, I won't give you what you wanted, but wait here a few minutes,' and room and held a brief consultation with one of his employes. In a quarter of an hour the clerk returned and held out a big, fat envelope to the miserable being. The latter, hardly realizing that anyone should send him a communication, broke the cover, and inside found five brand-new $100 bills and a railway ticket to St. Louis, with berth or parlor car. On seeing these. and realizing that the man whom he supposed would not let him have five dollars had been his benefactor, the recipient of this unexpected generosity broke down and cried like a child.

"There is not much more to say to the story, except that with the money the man went to his old home and started up in a small business out of which he derives a comfortable living. The moral, if there be one, is that millionaires are often as sympathetic as ordinary mortals. This particular one know to be the possessor of a big heart, and yet he has the best reasons for never talking about his acts o charity.'

Not Cheap, Anyway. Hastening to the assistance of the man who had been run over by the auto, we find him raised up and staring after the

"Well," he whispers, hoarsely, sinking back again, "take me to the hospital. I am satisfied." "Would you recognize the villain if you saw him again?" we asked. "Who? The man running it? I don't know; but that is one of the newest models, and it didn't cost a cent less than $5,000. I'd hate to be killed by a chear

Misplaced Confidence. "All I need is a fair chance," said the genteel beggar. "I've got plenty of confidence in myself if I could only get a machine."-Cincinnati Times-Star.

"You've got an unusual amount of Tommy. confidence in yourself if you think you can persuade me to give you a start,' said the hard-headed man .- Philadel phia Press.

Seven Naphtha Lakes The island of Sakhalin, near Japan has seven underground naphtha lakes; the area of the largest of them is 75,320 square yards. blackening others.—Chicago Journal.

SAWED BEAR MEAT.

Brain Undertook to Run a Sawmill. But the Saw Was Too Much for Him.

"Talking about bear experiences," said an old trapper the other day to a Bangor Commercial representative. "I had one many years ago that was a corker, and it shows that old bruin has quite a head on him, after all. It was one of the gory, bear-est-man sort of experiences, but a story that would make many people doubt the truth of it, but I can produce enough reliable witnesses to sub-over that part. "It happened up in the northern part of the state, and, at the time, bears were very thick, too thick for convenience. I was at the time engaged in lumbering operations and was in charge of a sawthe mill and eating up the provisions, especially the pork. We did not have any traps at hand, so we could not make

"The day the adventure tok place that two facts," the World says, "in con- I am going to tell you about I had been elderation of results, indicate that the working all night for the past few days percentage is against the football play- sawing logs and had gotten my sleep in He is in more danger than the by snoozing during the daytime. On this particular day I was pretty well tired out and I don't think that anything exof the University of Illinois, from 60 cept a cannon shot could have awakened American colleges show that in the last me, but this bruin that happened along ten years out of 210,334 students 22,766 | woke me up all right, and for a time I was pretty well scared.

"I had lain down for my little snooze killed. In 1902 the seriously injured and it was not long before I commenced numbered 143, and 12 were killed. In to fly around in gold charlots and was some years one player is killed or having a pretty rosy time of it in my maimed for each day of the playing sea- dreams, when I felt something sniffing son. In view of Prof. Dexter's figures, at my face and proving otherwise obit is impossible to assert that the game streperous. I managed to bring my eyes is maintained in the interest of the ath- to a focus and was nearly frightened to letic development of students, since it death to discover a good-sized bear enis shown that but 10.8 per cent. of the gaged in making a very full investigastudents play football. A form of ex- tion of my anatomy. Well, I can tell you ercise in which only about one student I did some pretty tall thinking and, as you know, it is said that a bear will not greatly to the physical development of touch a body that he thinks is dead. I was engaged for about all of the next two or there minutes in holding my breath and doing other things to make me appear lifeless.

"Pretty soon the bear gave me up as immortal and commenced to prowl an occasion of idleness, d'sipation and around the mill. 'He put in a very critical examination of everything that he could possibly reach and he hadn't been prowling around long before he discovered some deer meat hanging up. Well, it didn't take him long to pull the carcass down and commence to make good inroads into the meat. After he had been sating some time he discovered the logs standing on the carriage, and, evidently thinking that they would make him a comfortable seat for the remainder of his meal, took a good hunk of the meat and went out and sat down on the logs with his back to the saw.

"Now was my chance to have a little fun with the bear, which I was not slow in grasping. The logs where he was sitsing were quite a ways from me, so that I had plenty of chance to get at the lever that set the machinery in motion that worked the saw and movable carriage. Well, I got to the lever and pulled it over without the bear discovering my presence.

"The carriage commenced to move slowly toward the saw and you ought to have seen the expression on that bear's face. It would put the facial expression of Happy Hooligan out of sight. He became used to the motion of the carriage "The carriage was moving toward the saw in pretty good shape by this time fate, but about the same time that he commenced to realize that something very powerful and large saw, in the twinkling of an eye that bear was cut up into some of the finest bear chop that

"It didn't take me long to realize what a trick I had done and commenced to pick up the meat. I put it in cold storage and we had bear meat for the next the millionaire went into his private two or three weeks. That was the most exciting bear experience that I ever got into and although I didn't get hurt at all I don't want the feat repeated."

The trouble-making powers of a Welsh rabbit are not always limited to the physical being, as one young man now realizes. This particular young man, country bred, recently began his city life as a grocery clerk. The very first week a woman customer hurriedly demanded: "Some cheese for a rabbit, please." The young man did not stop to think whether rabbits enjoyed cheese-the customer's tone was too imperative for hesitation-so he put up what he supposed her per would like. An hour later a crestfallen clerk listened to the head grocer's lecture on the foolishness giving a valuable customer a bag full of cheese rinds and scraps. Now he knows what sort of cheese the "rabbit" takes .- N. Y. Post.

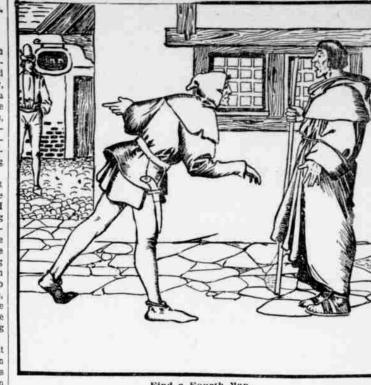

One of the Iowa Indians, according to an Oklahoma paper, is making a good living by selling so-called love powders. Little, peculiar shells found in the creeks and the root of a cer tain kind of morning glories furnish the sole ingredients of the love-compelling powder. The shells and roots are dried and guond to powder; then after making a sort of paste of the mixture the lovesick swain or squaw smears it over his or her face: then the love powder painted person goes close to the one whose affection is to be captured. It is claimed that the besmeared person is always victorious.

Wisdom of Experience. "Tommy," said his father, "I was surprised to hear that you had dared to dispute your mother. "But she was wrong, father," replied

"That has nothing to do with it, my son," continued the old man, "I am considerably older than you, and I'm right here to tell you that when a woman says a thing's so, it is so, whether it is so or not."-Cincinnati Enquirer.

White and Plack. You cannot whitewash yourself by

THE FORTUNE TELLER.

Find a Fourth Man.

A Man, who gave himself out for a Wizard and Fortune-Teller, used to stand in the market place and pretend to cast nativities, give information as to missing property and other matters of like kind. One day, while he was busy plying his trade, a waggish fellow broke through the crowd and, gasping as if for the want of breath, told him that his house was in flames and must shortly be burnt to the ground. Off ran the Wizard at the news as fast as his legs could carry him, while the Wag and the crowd of other people followed at his heels. The house, it seems, was not on fire at all and the Wag asked him, amid the jeers of the people, how it was that he who was so clever at telling other people's fortunes, should know so little of his own.

Moral-We had best become masters of our own affairs before we attempt to advise others of theirs.

LAKES OF PURE NAPHTHA.

Boundless Reservoirs of the Mineral Fuel Exist in the Eastern Part of Asia.

The chief source of the world's supply of naphtha promises to be shifted to the eastern part of Asia, which has been found to be one of the richest mineral fuel regions in the world, according to a recent consular report. The area of all the paying coal layers in Europe comprises only 22,760 square miles, an area equal to that of one of the Russian provinces-the Kazan province. The area of coal layers in eastern Asia, though not yet estimated, is considered incalculable.

Besides immense coal beds eastern Asia possesses wealthy underground naphtha lakes that will soon be the learn, and went at the other fellow with foundation of a great industry. Naphthe springs are found everywhere in or something of that sort and let him China, in Manchuria, in the Usseri dis- get in under your guard while you were trict in Japan, and on the Sakhalin island. The latter island not only possesses very rich coal mines, but also large naphtha lakes.

off, after having examined the coal fighter would get the tar licked out of beds and naphtha wells in Texas and him while he was getting his science Pennsylvania, made an investigation ready for use. Now, when I was a boy of the naphtha springs on Sakhalin island, and on his return to Baku de- aimed to get in the first blow." clared that all he had seen in the United States was nothing in comparison to what he found on Sakhalin.

The naphtha springs near the River Nootovo, on Sakhalin, excel those of less he's too easy with the first blow. Baku in every regard. Seven under- I tell you, when I was a boy," and the ground naphtha lakes are there, the old man began to get excited, "my aim area of the largest one being 63,000 was to swipe him first and swipe him square meters (75,320 square wards)

Japan must still import foreign naph- fellow in the ear you want to paste him tha. In 1900 she imported more than a hot one, and then-60,000,000 gallons, and in 1901 more than 61,000,000 gallons. The export brick pile," interrupted the boy. from Japan is inconsiderable, so that the Japanese naphtha does not threaten er startled. to become a rival to Sakhalin naphtha. On the contrary, Japan promises to become a good market for the Sakhalin a brick in each hand, what's the next naphtha.

The development of the oil industry when you were a boy?" on Sakhalin island will help the river navigation on the Amur and in the far after a minute of thoughtful consideraeast generally.

The ministry of agriculture and imperial properties has ordered that the you should expect your father to give 33-mile line along the southeastern you advice that would be sure to lead coast of Lake Baikal be acknowledged you into trouble, and very likely would as actual naphtha-producing land. It tend toward the cultivation of a boisextends from Kultchuoy to the mouth terous, quarrelsome disposition. Now of River Chermushan (54 degrees north | run out and play, and don't bother me latitude), to the north from Svyatoy any more." Noss

A party of five Englishmen arrived recently on Sakhalin to examine the coal oil regions lately discovered on the eastern coast of the island. Among the party there is one geologist and one engineer.

Description of Irkntsk. Harry de Windt, the explorer, writes thus of Irkutsk, which is called the doned in despair some childish task Paris of Siberia: "It is an unfinished, that I had undertaken and my father slipshod city, a strange mixture of squalor and grandeur, with tortuous, do anything, he said. 'There's nothing ill-paven streets, where the wayfarer looks instinctively for the 'no-thor- And then he smiled slightly and oughfare' board. There is one long added: 'You could even carry water struggling main street, with fairly good shops and buildings, but beyond this Irkutsk remains much the same dull, dreary-looking place that I remember in the early '90s, before the railway had aroused the town from its slumber of centuries. Even now the place is absolutely primitive and uncivilized, from a European point of distant, are curiously threatened with view, and the yellow Chinese and beady-eyed Tartars who throng the business quarters are quite in keeping | these dunes from small oval patches of with the oriental filth around, unredeemed by the usual eastern color even a slight deposit may gradually deand romance. On fine mornings the market place presents a curious and interesting appearance, for here you creasing size, with steady enlargement may see the celestial in flowery silk of the sand accumulation. Planting naelbowing the fur-clad Yakute and tive grasses is among the remedies to be Bokhara shaking hands with Japan." tried

Tobacco is both cultivated and consumed on a large scale in Japan. The for you, Mr. Closefist?" plant was introduced by the Portuguese in the seventeenth century, and the me a larger pair." trade in it is a government monopoly. Tobacco is almost universally used in a fit 'em?" small pipe. While cigarettes are manufactured in large quantities, they are nearly all sent out of the country.

Cemetery Employes The employes of the Leipzig ceme tery object to being called "grave-diggers," and have abandoned the lugubrious name,

HE KNEW HOW TO FIGHT.

Father Gives His Son Some Pointers. But Finds the Boy Is Not So "So you've had a fight, have you?"

said his father. The boy was so badly out of breath that it was a minute or two before he could get wind enough to say: "Yep," and somehow the old man didn't seem to regard the breathlessness as a particularly auspicious omen, relates the New York Tribune. "Didn't you lick him?" he asked.

"Nope," replied the boy. "I guess you didn't follow your poor old father's advice," said the old man, "I suppose you thought you knew more about it than he ever had a chance to some new-fangled uppercuts or swings figuring out the scientific points of some new blow. Science is all right, I suppose, in a fight by rounds, where there have been all the usual preliminaries. The chemical engineer, K. S. Platon- but I've seen the time when a scientific and saw there was a fight coming on I

"That's my way," said the boy.
"It is, eh?" returned the old man "Well, I don't see how a boy can get licked if he goes in on that system, unhard. I'd just land him one over the Notwithstanding the increased out- eye or under the chin and it would be put of the Japanese naphtha industry, all over. You see, when you paste a

"W-what?" asked the old man, rath-

"Suppose he lands on a brick pile when you hit him and gets up with a half

move in the system that never failed

"My boy," said the old man, severely, tion of the subject, "fighting is a bad business at best, and I am surprised that

Carrying Water in Sieve.

John Diedrich Spreckels, the son of Claus Spreckels, is the proprietor of a San Francisco newspaper. To an editor one day Mr. Spreckels was talking about peristence and in the course of his remarks he said: "My father is a great believer in persistence-in patience. Once when I was a boy I abanreproved me for it. 'Persistence will you can't accomplish with patience. in a sieve if you would have the patience to wait long enough.' How long would I have to wait? I said. 'Till it froze,' my father answered."

Sand Hills in Formation.

In India the town of Karachi and its suburb of Clifton, two or three miles separation by the growth of sand hills. Mr. R. D. Oldham traces the growth of sand on the stony surface, and shows that flect the air currents and produce a calm space and an eddy of slowly in-

Why Didn't He.

"Are your shoes sure enough too tight

"Indeed they are Johnny, I must ge "But why don't you just make yourself

"Why, what an idea! How could I do that?"

"I don't know, but sister says you can be mighty small when you feel like it."-Houston Post.

Ancient Holly. There is a holly tree 600 years old near Pisa, in Italy.